The panel discussions will address timely and provocative questions about vaccine safety and vaccination choice. In Vaccine Epidemic, over twenty experts in ethics, law, science, medicine, business and history examine:

- Are vaccines safe? Do I have a choice? Who decides?
- The human right to vaccination choice
- Vaccine safety science and evidence-based medicine
- Conflicts of interest in the vaccine program
- The ethics and constitutionality of vaccine mandates

Dr. Bernadine Healy, former director of the National Institutes of Health and current health editor of the U.S. News & World Report offered the following for Vaccine Epidemic's cover:

"There are unanswered questions about vaccine safety. We need studies on vaccinated populations based on various schedules and doses as well as individual patient susceptibilities that we are continuing to learn about. No one should be threatened by the pursuit of this knowledge. Vaccine policy should be the subject of frank and open debate, with no tolerance for bullying. There are no sides—only people concerned for the well-being of our children."
